TO THE NOBILITY and GENTRY OF GREAT BRITAIN,

That are desirous to speak French for their pleasure, and ornament;

AS ALSO,

To all Merchant-Adventurers, as well English, as the worthy Company of Dutch here Resident, or others to whom the said Language is necessary for Commerce and Foreign Correspondence.

Here, is no quality so incident to all earthly things as Corruption and Change; Nor is it to be wondred at, considering that the Elements themselves, which are the principles and primitive Ingredients whereof they be compounded, are naturally so qualified: It were as easie a thing for the beholders eye to fix a firm shape upon a running Cloud, or to cut out a Garment that but for seven and twenty days together might fit the Moon (who, by privilege of her neighbourhood, predominates more over us than any other Coelestial body) as to find stability in any thing here below.

Nor is this common frailty or fatality rather incident only to the grosser sort of Elementary Creatures, but Mankind, upon whom it pleased the Almighty to imprint his own Image, and make him Lord Paramount of this lower World, is subject to the same lubricity. Neither is his body and blood only liable thereunto, but the Idea's of his mind, and interiour operations of his soul, Religion her self, with the notions of holiness, and the formality of saving Faith not excepted, nay, the very faculty of Reason (as we find it too true by late experience) is subject to the same instableness.

But to come to our present purpose, among other privileges which are peculiar to mankind, as emanations flowing from the Intellect, Language is none of the least, and Languages have felt these fits of inconstancy and mutation as much as any thing else, and among others the French Language. Nor can it seem strange to those who know the airy volatil humour of that Nation, that their speech should partake somewhat of the disposition of their spirit, but will rather wonder it hath received no oftner change, especially considering what outward causes did also concur thereunto; As that their Kings should make six several voyages to conquer or conserve what was got in the Holy Land; considering how long the English kept firm footing in a great part of France; as also the Wars and Weddings they had with their Neighbours, which by the long sojourn of their Armies in other Countries caused by the first, and the foreign Courtiers that came in with their Queens arising from the second, introduced a frequent alteration. For Languages are like Laws or Coins, which commonly receive some change at every sift of Princes: Or as slow Rivers by insensible alluvions take in and let out the waters that feed them, yet are they said to have still the same beds; So Languages by a regardless kind of adoption of some new words, and manumission of old, do often vary, yet the whole bulk of the same speech keeps entire.

Touching the ancient and true genuine Language of the Gauls, some would have it to be a Dialect of the Dutch, others of the Greek, others of the British or Welsh; concerning this last opinion, there be some reasons to fortifie it, that are not to be easily slighted; The first is, that the ancient Gauls used to come frequently to be instructed here by the British Druids, who were the Divines and Philosophers of those times, which they would not have done unless by mutual communication they had understood one another in some Vulgar Language, for this was before the Latine or Greek Tongue came this side the Alpes, or that any Books were written, and there are no meaner men than Tacitus and Cesar himself that record this. The second reason is, that there want not good Geographers who hold that this Island was tied to France at first, as Sicily was to Calabria, and Denmark to Germany, by an Isthmos or neck of land twixt Dover and Rullen; for if one do well observe the quality of the Cliffs on both shores, he will judge they were but one Homogeneous piece at first, and that they were flented and shivered asunder by some act of violence. The third is, that divers think before the Romans conquered the Gauls, the Country was called Wallia, which afterwards they named Gallia, turning W into G, as they did elsewhere; yet the Walloon keeps his radical letter to this day. The fourth reason is, that there be divers old Gaulic words yet remaining in the French, which are pure Welsh, both for sense and pronunciation, as Havre a Haven, is the same in Welsh, Derechef again, Putain a whore, Airian brass money, Prou an Interjection of stopping, or driving a beast, but especially when one speaks in French any old word that cannot be understood, they say Il parle Baragonin, which is to this day in plain Welsh white bread; Lastly, Pausanias says that mark in the Celtic old tongue signifieth a horse, and it still signifieth so in Welsh.

But whether the British, Greek, or Dutch was the original language of the Gauls, certain it is that it was the Walloon, (I confine my self to Gallia Celtica) which, when the Roman Eagle had fastened his talions there, and planted 23 Legions up and down the country, he did in tract of time utterly extinguish: It being the ordinary ambition of Rome, wheresoever she prevailed, to make the Launce usher in her Language (and Laws) as marks of Conquest; which nevertheless she could not do in Spain or this Island, because they had posts, and places of safety to retire unto, as Biscay, and Wales, where nature hath cast up those mountains as propugnacles of defence, among which the very aboriginall Languages of both Countries remain to this day. Now France being a passable, and a pervious plain country, the Romans quickly diffused and rooted themselves in every part thereof: and so co-planted their Language, which in a short revolution of time came to be called Romand. But when the Franconians, a people of Germany, came afterwards to invade and possess Gallia, both people and speech was called French ever after. Now, as all other things have their degrees of growth, so Languages have the like before they attain a perfection. We find that the Latin her self in the time of the Saliens was but rude, afterwards under Ennius and Cato the Censor, it was refined in the twelve Tables, but in Cæsar, Cicero, and Salust's days, it came to the highest pitch of pureness and perfection, and so dainty were the Romans of their Language then, that they would not suffer any exotic word to be enfranchized among them, or enter into any of their Diplomas and public Instruments. The word Emblem having got into one, it was thrust out by an express-Edict of the Senate, but Monopolium with much ado had leave to stay in, yet not without a large Preface or Apology. A little after, the Latin tongue (for the vulgarity thereof) began to degenerate and decline very much, and so out of her ruins sprang up the Italian, Spanish, and French. The French Language being set thus upon a Latin stock, (whereof she retains to this day some pure entire words, as animal, cadaver, tribunal, non, plus, qui, or, &c.) hath received since sundry alterations, and habitudines.

Chilperic, one of the first Race of Kings, commanded by public Edict, that these Greek Letters $\alpha \beta \gamma$ should be added to the French Alphabet, to make the Language more masculine and strenuous, but after him it was not long observed.

Now, it is no worthless observation, that Languages use to comply with the humour, and much display the inclination of a people: The French is quick and spritfull, and so is his pronunciation; The Spaniard is slow, and grave, so is his pronunciation; for though the Spanish and French be branches of the Latin tree, yet the one may be calle'd Latin shortned, the other, Latin drawn out in length; as corpus, tempus, capus, &c. are monosyllables in French, as corps, temps, cap, or chef, whereas the Spaniard seems rather to add to them, as tiempo, cuerpo, cabeça. And indeed, of all other Nations, the Spaniard most of any affects long words, for he makes some thrice as long as they are in the French; as of levant a rising, he makes levantamiento, of pensée a thought, he makes pensamiento, of compliment, he makes complimiento; besides, the Spaniard doth use to pause so in his pronunciation, that the tongue seldom foreruns his wit, so that his brain may very well raise and superfoete a second thought before the first be uttered; yet is not the French so hasty in his utterance as he seems to be, for his quickness or volubility proceeds partly from that concatenation he useth among his syllables, by joyning the first syllable of the following word to the last of the precedent, so that sometimes a whole sentence is made in a manner but one word; and he who will speak the French roundly and well, must observe this rule.

The French Language began first to polish, and arrive to that delicacy she is now come unto, in the midst of the Reign of Philip de Valois; Marot did something under Francis the First, (which King was a restorer of Learning in general, as well as a refiner of Language) but Ronsard did more under Henry the Second.

Since the Reign of these Kings, there is little alteration in the context of speech, but only in the choice of words, and softness of pronunciation, proceeding from such wanton spirits that began to miniardise, and make the Language more dainty or feminine.

But to shew what changes the French hath received from what it was, I will produce these few instances in Verse and Prose which I found in some ancient Authors; the first shall be of a Gentlewoman that translated Esops Fables many hundred years since, out of English into French; wherein she concludes,

*Au finement de cest' Escript
Qu' en Romans ay tourné, & dit,
Me nommeray par remembrance
Marie ay nom si suis de France
Per l'amour le comte Guillaume
Le plus vaillant de ce Reaulme
M'entremis de ce livre faire
Et de l'Anglois en Roman traire,
Mays appelle l'on cil livre
Qu'on translata, & fit escrire,
De Grin en latin le tourna,
Et li Roy Alvret qui l'ama,
Le translata puis en Anglois,
Et je l'ay tourné en François.*

In the Roman de la Rose.

*Quand la bouche toucha la moye,
Ce fut ce dont au cœur j'eus joye.*

And elsewhere,

*Sire juge donnez sentence
Pour moy, car la pucelle est moye.*

Two of the most approved ancientest Authors in French are Geoffroy de Villardouin, Marshal of Champagne, and Hugues de Bersy, a Monk of Clugny, in the Reign of Philip Auguste, above 500 years since, from these I will borrow the two ensuing examples, the first from the Marshal upon a Croisada given for a voyage to the Holy Land.

Scachiez que mille cent quatre vingt & dix huit ans apres l'incarnation de nostre Seigneur Jesus Christ, al temps Innocent 3. Apostoille de Rome, & Philippe Roy de France, & Richard Roy d'Angleterre ot un saint homme en France qui ot nom Folque de Nully, cil Nullez si est entre Laigny for Marne, & Paire, & il ere prestre, & tenoit le paroichre de la ville; & cil Folque dont je vous dy, comença a parler de Dieux par France, & par les autres terres, & entre nostre sire fit mains miracles par luy. Scachiez que la renommée de c'il saint homme alla tant qu'elle vint a l'Apostoille de Rome Innocent, & l'Apostoille envoya un sien Cardinal Maistre perron de chappes Croisie, & manda par lay le pardon tel comme vous diray. Tout cil qui se croiseront, & feroient le service deu un an en l'ost feroient quittes de tout le pechez qu'ils auroient faits; porce que cil pardo fisty gran si sen esmeturent mult li cuers des gens, & mult s'en croisierent por ce le pardon ere si gran.

Hugues de Bersy, who made the Griot Bible, so much spoken of in France, begins thus:

*Don siecle puant & horrible
M'estuet commencer une Bible,
Per poindre & per aiguillonner,
Et per bons exemples donner
Ce n'rt pas Bible lisongere,
Mais fins, & voire, & druiniere, Mirouer ert a toutes gens.*

If one would compare the English that was spoke 500 years ago, with the present, he should find a greater alteration. But to know how much the modern French differs from the ancient, let him read our Common Law, which was held good French in William the Conquerors time. The Wars and Weddings tother side the Alps, as I said before, hath caused many Italian words to be naturalized and become free Denizons of France; as contraste strife, accort wife, garbe a fashion; cavalier, centinelle, ambuscade, attaquer to to set upon, Infanterie, Camifade, with divers others, which are all Italian words grafted upon French stocks.

I find there are some well-sounding single words disus'd in the present French, which seem to be more significant than those that are come in their places, as maratre, paratre, fillatre, seurage, a Mother in law, a Father in law, a Son or Daughter in law, a Sister in law; which now they express by two words, belle mere, beau pere, belle sœur. Besides, I find that some words in French are so abused, that they are turned to a counter sense; as we use the Dutch word crank in English to be well disposed, whereas in the original it signifieth to be sick: So in the French Coc is taken for one whose wife is loose in the hills, and made him a passive cuckold; whereas clean contrary Coc the Cuckow laies her eggs in another birds nest. This word Pleger is also taken to drink after one is drunk unto; whereas the first true use of the word was, that if the party drunk unto was not disposed to drink himself, he would depute another to do it for him, else the party who began would take it ill, which made Charlemain, as the Record is yet to be seen, to inhibit his souldiers very strictly to drink one to another; and in the abuse of this word the English also is more faulty. Moreover this word Abri, derived from the Latin aprium, is taken in French (as also abrigé in Spanish) for a close place or shelter, whereas in the original it signifies an open free sunshine. They term in French, a boon companion or merry greek, Roger bon temps, whereas the original is rouge bon temps, fustine and reddish fair weather. They use also in France, when one hath a good bargain, to say, il a joué à bon le veau, whereas the original is a bonne veue. A beacon or watch tower is called Beffroy, whereas the true word is l'Es-froy. A travelling warrant is called Passeport, whereas the true word is Passe par tout. When one is grown hoarse they use to say, il a vu le loup, he hath seen the Wolf, whereas that effect is wrought in one whom the Wolf hath first seen, according to Pliny and the Poet, — Lupillum videre priores.

There is one kind of saying or Proverb which is observable, whereby France doth still acknowledge her self to be indebted to England, which is, when one hath paid all his Creditors, he useth to say, Jay payé tout mes Anglois, and in this and other phrases Anglois is taken for Creancier a Creditor, and I presume it had its foundation from this, that when the French were bound by the Treaty in Bretigny to pay England so much for the ransom of King John then Prisoner, the contribution lay so heave upon them, that for many years they could not make up the sum; The occasion might be seconded in Henry the Eighth's time, at the rendition of Bullen, and upon other Treaties, as also in Queen Elizabeth's Reign (besides those moneys she had disbursed her self, to put the Crown on Henry the Fourth's head) which makes me think on a passage that is recorded in Pasquier, that hapned when the Duke of Anjou, under pretence of wooing the Queen, came over to England, who being brought to her Presence, she told him, He had come in a good time to be hostage for the monies that France owed her Father, and others of her Progenitors; whereunto the Duke answered pleasantly, That he was not come only to be hostage, but her close prisoner. There be two other sayings, or Proverbs, that though they be obsolet, yet are they worthy the knowledge; the first is, Il a perdu ses cheveux, he hath lost his hair, meaning his honour; for in the first Race of Kings there was a law called la loi de la chevelure, whereby it was lawful for the noblesse only to wear long hair; and if any of them had committed some foul or ignoble act, they used to be condemned to have their hair cut off as a mark of ignominy, and it is as much as if he had been flourdeliz'd, viz. burnt in the back or hand, or branded in his face. The other Proverb was, Il a quitté sa ceinture, he hath given up his girdle, which intimated as much as if he had become banquerout, or had all his estate forfeited. It being the ancient Law of France, that when any upon some offence had that penalty of confiscation inflicted upon him, he used before the Tribunal of Justice to give up his girdle, implying thereby that the girdle held every thing that belonged to a mans estate, as his budget of money and writings, the keys of his house, his sword, dagger, gloves, &c. I will add hereunto another Proverb, which had been quite lost had not our Order of the Garter preserved it, which is, Honi soit qui mal y pense, we English it, All be to him who thinks ill; though the true sense be, Let him be berayed who thinks any ill, being a Metaphor taken from a child that hath berayed his clouts, and in France there is not one in a hundred who understands this word now adays.

Furthermore, I find in the French Language that the same fate hath attended some words, as usually attend men, among whom we find some use to rise to preferment, others to fall to decay, and an undervalue. I will instance in a few; This word Maître, Master, was a word of high esteem in former times among the French, and applicable to Noblemen and others in some high Office only, but now it is fallen from the Baron to the Boor, from the Count to the Cobler, or any other mean Artisan, as Maître Jean le Sarrasier, Mr John the Cobler, Maître Jaquet le Cabaretier, Mr Jammy the Taphouse man. Sire was also appropriate only to the King; but now, adding a name after it, it is a title applicable to any mean man upon the endorsement of a Letter, or otherwise. But this word Souverain, clean contrary, hath raised itself to that cumble of greatness, that it is now applied only to the King, whereas in times past the President of any petty Court, any Bayliff or Seneschal was called Souverain. Maréchal likewise at first was the name of a Smith, Farrier; or one that dressed horses, but it climb'd by degrees to that height, that the chiefest Commanders of the Gendarmery of France are come to be called Marshals, which about one hundred years since were but two in all, and now they are twelve. This title Majesty hath no great antiquity in France, for it began but in Henry the Second's time; It was the stile of France at first, as well as any other Countries, tutoyer, to thou, any person one spake unto; but when the Commonwealth of Rome turn'd to an Empire, and that so much power came into one mans hand, then, in regard he was able to confer Honour and Offices, the Courtiers began to magnifie him, and speak to him in the plural number by you, and to deifie him with transcending Titles, as we read in Symmachus his Epistles to the Emperour Theodosius, and to Valentinian, wherein his stile unto them is, Vestra aeternitas, vestrum nomen, vestra perennitas, vestra clementia, so that you in the plural number, with other Titles and Complements, seems to have its first rise with Monarchy, which descended afterwards by degrees upon particular men.

The French tongue hath divers Dialects, the Picard, that of Jersey and Guernsey, appendixes once to the Dutchie of Normandy, the Provençal, the Gascon or speech of Languedoc, which Scaliger would Etymologize from langue d'oxy, whereas it comes from langue de Got, in regard the Goths and Saracens, who by their incursions and long stay in Aquitain, first corrupted the speech of that part of Gallia; The Walloon is another Dialect, who is under the King of Spain; and they of Liege have also a Dialect of the French, which among themselves they call Romand to this day; There is another Dialect also called Franco, which is much used in Greece and Turkie, and is one of the chiefest speech of Commerce in some parts of the Levant, but it symbolizeth more with the Provençal and Gascon, than with the pure French, which is most used in these Northwest parts, especially in England, where besides the main Language, there be so many French words crept in and naturalized among us, that one had need to study French to speak good English. Nor can it

it be any disparagement for the English thus to admit and enfranchise some foreign words, as French and divers Italian for her service, in regard that the Language grows every day more copious and rich by this adoption of the choicest and best significant words.

Touching the modern French that now is spoken in the Kings Court, in the Courts of Parliament, and in the Universities of France, there hath been lately a great competition which was the best; but by the learnedst and most indifferent persons, it was adjudg'd that the stile of the Kings Court was the smoothest and most elegant, because the other two did smell the one of Pedantry, the other of wrangling and Chiquanery: And the late Prince of Conde with the Duke of Orleans that now is, were used to have a Censor in their houses, that if any of their Family spoke any word that favoured of the Palace or the Schools he should incur an amercement.

Touching this ensuing Dictionary, Master Cotgrave the Collector and Author thereof, hath as well deserved in this kind of his Country, as ever any did; for it is a most elaborate piece, that cost a great quantity of oyl and industry; he hath not only the simple words as other ordinary Dictionaries, but Phrases and Proverbs upon them, with other observations: This commendation, as it is no flattery to give him, so it were an injury to deny him.

The former work is not a whit lessened by this review, only a great number of those words that are now obsolete, and held pedantick, forced or affected, are distinguished by this mark †, from others that have now the vogue in the refined Court French, which I would not presume to do only of my self, without the coadjutorship of a noble and knowing French Gentleman.

There was never yet any perfect Vocabulary, or Nomenclator in any Language; and though this may seem a Paradox to some, I say, there never was, nor is there any that can speake a Language so exactly, as to call every thing he meets withal by its name; put case the perfectest Linguist in the English now living, should go aboard a ship, then to a Carpenters shop, or some other Artisans, thence go abroad a hawking or hunting, then walk in a botanical Garden, I believe it is impossible for him to name all the Tacklings of the first, all the Tools of the second, all the terms of the third, and the names of all the flowers, fruits, and herbs he shall find in the last; and if he chance to go thence to any Apothecary shop, 'twill grieve him to name all the Drugs and Simples he finds there.

The late Cardinal Richelieu made it part of his glory to advance Learning and the French Language (which may be some recompence for the ocean of blood he spilt.) Among other monuments he erected an University where the Sciences should be read in French, for the ease of his Countrymen, whereby they might presently fall to the matter, and not spend time to study words so long. He also had a private place in Paris, called L'Academie de beaux Esprits, where forty of the choicest wits of France used to meet every Munday to refine and garble the French Language of all pedantick, and old words, as also of some superfluous consonants, and put such another Dictionary to light as Crusca in Italian; there wanted not some instructions from thence toward this.

To conclude, If those castigations and Supplements which go with this new Edition may conduce to the publick good, and to the advantage of those gentle spirits who have a vertuous desire to be versed in the refined Court French now current, I have my wish, I have my reward.

Your most humble Servit,

JAMES HOWELL.

THE POSTSCRIPT.

THat the World may be rightly informed as to the difference of this Edition, of 1673, from the others that have been formerly publisht, the Printer, for the further compleating, and better perfecting of this Work, presented to the most knowing persons, true Lovers of the French, severall books of the former Impression, with Paper sowed betwixt every Lease, that in their discourse, or otherwise reading of Authors, if they met with any words that were not in the former Dictionary, they might at their better leisure insert them; which hath taken so happy an effect, that from them, together with these my last endeavours, this Dictionary is enriched with many hundred of words never before Printed, amongst the rest those that are most useful of the Mechanicks, as to the knowledge of trades, are included; as also other new invented terms, which the admired Monsieur Scudery, and other late Romancers, have so happily publisht in their printed Volumns, together with additions of the most significant Proverbs, most refined Gallicismes, and other helps for the advantage of those that would arrive to the most exact knowledge of the French; so that the wisest Students, as to this indefatigable enterprise, will render this Dictionary as absolute as Riders and Holyokes for the Latin, as Flores with the deserving Torriano for the Italian, the French themselves being greater buyers of this Book, than of any Dictionary extant, for their own Language, or our English, so that for what the most industrious Mr Cotgrave did before, and these other worthy persons have since added, Posterity must, as long as this Language is to be acquired, remain obliged.

The

The French Grammar.

The PROEM.

WHat Foundations are to material Fabriques, the same is Grammar to a Language, If the Foundation be not well layed, 'twill be but a poor tottering Superstructure; If Grammatical grounds go not before, there is no Language can be had in any perfection. The Schoolmen use to compare Logic to the Fist, and Rhetoric to the Palm of the hand (pugno & palmæ) in regard the one hath a close pressing form of proceeding, the other a dilated and loose open way of expression; Grammar may be compared to the Feet or Supporters, which the other two use to go upon, and indeed all other Sciences, specially the knowledge of Languages.

Now, for a Dictionary, which contains the whole bulk of a Language, to go before the Grammar, is to make the Building precede the Basis: Therefore it was held more consentaneous to Reason, and congruous to Order, that the Grammar should be put here in the first place, for Art observes the Method of Nature, to make us creep before we go: Moreover, the exemplifying Words and Sentences in French are here Englished all along, for one will come with more facility to pronounce a Word aright, when he carrieth the Sense of it along with him.

J. H.

Of

Of the French Letters.

Touching the French Abcee; for Alphabet I will not call it according to the vulgar error, that word being peculiar only to the Greek Tongue, it is to be observed that the English hath two Letters, K, and W, more than the French, which consists of 22 only, viz. A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, L, M, N, O, P, Q, R, S, T, V, X, Y, Z.

The Letters may be said to be prime and simple Elements of all Languages; of Letters are made Syllables, of Syllables Words, of Words Sentences, of Sentences Books and Volumes. These Letters divide themselves into Vowels and Consonants: The Vowels a, e, i, o, u, and y, are the principal ingredients of Words, nay, no Consonant is pronounceable, or soundable without one of them, therefore it is fit they should have priority of place.

A in the English Tongue, and in no other, hath two differing sounds, the open and clear, as Balaam, the other pressing, and as it were half mounded and mincingly, as stale ale; In French 'tis always pronounced as in the first, clear and ouvert, as l'Amour fait la rage, mais l'Argent le mariage, Love makes rage, but money marriage.

To avoid gaping, which is the worst kind of cacophony in any Language, there is 't oftentimes interposed and added when a Verb ends with a before these small words, Il be, elle she, or on which is a note of an Impersonal Verb in French; as Mon pere sera il icy; Will my Father be here? before il you must put a t enclytical wife, as Mon pere sera t'il icy? ma mere viendra elle aussy? Will my Mother come also? You must pronounce ma mere viendra t'elle aussy? que dira on de vous? What will be spoken of you? You must write que dira t'on de vous? Sometimes instead of t, is put before on the Impersonal nose, as Que fera l'on a moy, si l'on fait ces choses a vous? What will be done to me, if they do these things to you?

E hath two sounds in French, the one full and strong, therefore it is called é masculine, and must be pronounced as the ee's in this Latin word coercere, to compell, with other Verbs of the second Conjugation, and commonly this é hath a little on the head of it, as degré a degree, pré a meadow. The other is called e feminine, because it is pronounced carelessly and soft, as these ee's in credere, to believe, which such Verbs of the third Conjugation; or as the ee's in this English example, John Donne, Anne Donne, undone: This French Proverb will shew both, Aujourd'hui en terre, demain enterre, To day on earth, to morrow under the earth, in terre e is feminine, in enterre it is masculine, and hath an acute sound. And as after à an enclytical t is interposed when a Verb comes before il, elle, or on, so also when a Verb ending with e, comes before any of these small words, a t is added to make the sound full and stronger, as parle il bon François? Dost he speak good French? Pronounce parle t'il. Desire elle sortir? Dost she desire to go out? Pronounce desire t'elle; tire on bon vin icy? Do they draw good Wine here? Pronounce tire t'on, so that among all the rest I hath this priviledge, to be pronounced when it is not written.

All Infinitive Moods of the first Conjugation, as tirer to draw, parler to speak, have an é masculine before the r; as also all words ending in ier, as Ramendier a Coblér, Cordonnier a Shoemaker, with divers other words of Trade, and indeed all words ending with er, are pronounced pointingly, as danger, léger light, Bergér a Shepherd. E coming before m or n, is oftentimes pronounced like a, as entendement understanding, must be pronounced as it were written antandement, enterrement a buriall, is pronounced anterrement. The third person Plural in Verbs ending in ent, where the n is drawn'd, are excepted; as prient they pray, arriuent they arrive, prierent they prayed, arriuerent they arrived; in these Verbs e keeps her genuin sound; as also, in words ending in ien, as parle bien, ou parle rien, Speak well, or speak nothing; as also in these words, Musicien, Parisien, Chrestien, mien, tien, sien, A Musician, a Parisien, a Christian, mine, shine, his; as for Example, Qui perd le sien, perd le sens, He that loseth his own, loseth his sense, in sien e retains its primitive pronunciation, in sens it degenerates to a, as if it were written sans; but these following words, though i go before en, must be excepted, Experience, patience, science, inconvenience, audience, with these words, client, escient (earnest) patient, ingredient, expedient, orient, sient dung, in all these en is pronounced like an.

I hath a peculiar sound in English, which differeth from all other Nations, for all others as well as the French, pronounce i like ee, whereas the English pronounce it as if it were a Diphthong composed of ei. I at the beginning of a Syllable before any other Vowel degenerates to a Consonant, and is commonly written long j, as jaloux jealous, jedy thursday, joly deist or pretty, juge a judge; when it comes before ll, it is pronounced as if it came after them, to make the ll more fluid; as faillir to faile, must be pronounced, as if it were written fallir, mouillir to wet, as mouillir, fille a maid, as fillie; Except these words, Ville & Village, a Town and Village, pupille a pupill, étoille a star, caviller to cavill, mille a mile, all which are pronounced as they are written.

The Vowel O is not pronounced so round and open by the French, as it is by the English; when it comes before m, or n, it is pronounced as if it were double, as pomme an apple, comment how, donner to give, broncher, to stumble, are pronounced as if they were written pommme, roomment, doonner, brooucher; but these words that are compounded with the Preposition pro, and derived from the Latine, are excepted, as prononcer to pronounce, proceder to proceed, &c. Except also such words that have Greek roots, as comete, a comet, tome a tome, oeconome a good house Governour, also, dome a town-house, bonace a calm, domanie a demean, &c.

V as well as I hath the priviledge to become consonant, when it comes immediately before another Vowel, as it useth to have also in the English, as likewise when it comes before r, as sievre a fever, orsevre a Goldsmith, vray true, which makes but one syllable, povre poor. The genuine pronunciation of v in French, is as the English pronounce ow in crew, pew, few, or in a whistling tone, as we pronounce, fluse, mute, &c. The German and Swede, with others, being a strong winded people, and accustomed to rough collision of Consonants, are subject oftentimes to turn v into f, as fotre for vostre yours, falet for valet a boy. And the Germans are also subject to turn b into v, as I heard a Tale of a Dutchman in Orleans, who thinking to complement with his Hostess, who had divers children, told her, Par may foy Madame vous avez de veaux enfans, Madam you have calves for your children, pronouncing veaux calves, for beaux fair,

Y in French though it be a letter, yet sometimes it makes not only a Syllable, as yver winter, yvre drunken, but also, a whole word of it self, viz. an Adverb relating to person and place, as Mon frere y est, My brother is there, Dieu vous y ayde God help you there, a complement used upon sneezing. Though Y have still the same pronunciation with I the Vowel, yet herein it differs, that Y is constant to it self, and never degenerates into a Consonant as I often doth.

Thus much of the Vowels, which may be called the ligaments or arteries which knit the consonants together. A and O have the priviledges above the rest, in that a stands for a Substantive, as l'hest marqué a l'A, He is a principal honest man; ce monnoy porte l'A, this coin carrieth A, which is the best kind of coin, bearing upon it the Persian mark; O sometimes passeth for avec, as vien o moy, come with me, je dormiray o vous, I will sleep with you: but this is used among the ruder sort.

Of Diphthongs, or compounded Vowels.

Diphthongs are made meerly of Vowels, and the French Tongue hath many of them, and some triphthongs, which are pronounced commonly as they are written, except these three, ai, ay, au; Ai is pronounced like an é masculine if a consonant follow it, as clair clear, lain found, faim hunger, are pronounced as clér, sén, fém; and so is ay likewise, but if a Vowel immediately follow, then they are pronounced as they are written, as rayon a sun-beam, playe a wound, crayonner to paint roughly.

Moreover, in the first Persons Singular of the Preterperfect senses ai and ay are pronounced as written, as je parlay I spoke, juray I swore, &c. pais a Country, hayr to hate, naïf natural, are not diphthongs, but stretched to dissyllables, as pa-iz, ha-yr, na-if, which makes a mighty difference twixt paix peace, and pais a country, the first being pronounced pez, the other as before said pa-is. The diphthong au is prelated like a full o, as hautain high-minded, is pronounced as hoten, chevaux horses, as chevole, chaud hot, as chode. The Diphthong oi and oy are to be pronounced extensively as oe, as sans Roy, sans loy, without King, without Law, pronounce them Roe, loe.

The diphthong ou is pronounced like oo, as Ou allez vous? Whither go you? must be pronounced oo allez voos; la goutte le Médecin me voit goutte, The gout makes a Phisician blind, pronounce as if it were goote.

So much of the Vowels (with their Diphthongs) which are the same to a Language, as the five senses to the body, in points of necessity; without these the body is but an unwieldy carcass, without the Vowels the whole bulk of Consonants is a soundless thing.

The Spaniards use to vaunt, that their Language hath a word that contains in it all the five Vowels, which no other Language can say of it self; it is Queja a sheep, Jehova hath also all the Vowels.

Of

The French Grammar.

Of Consonants.

The French is a hungry Language, for it devours more Consonants than any other, which makes his speaking and writing to differ so much as doth his singing and writing: I will not say his words and actions differ so much, though he be full of complements.

Heretofore in the French Orthography, there were more Letters written than now there are, and I believe the reason was to shew the Original and Etymology of their Language from the Latin, but now they begin to omit them more and more as superfluous, though in Province and Languedoc they be all pronounced and written. The reason why the French ore hips so many Consonants is, to make the speech more easie and fluent, as vous me ferez croire que vessies sont lanternes, you will make me believe that bladders are Lanterns: In this saying those Letters which have pricks under them are all omitted. Now the most general rule of Consonants is, that if the word following begin with a Consonant, and the precedent word end with one, that at the end is commonly cut off, to enchain as it were the words together, and make the pronunciation more smooth and round, and this concatenation of words, makes the Frenchman seem to speak faster than he doth. Among others let this example serve, to shew how much the Pen differs from the Tongue, Il fait beau temps, 'tis fair weather, which is pronounced I se botan, where half the letters are drown'd. C'est a l'hault goust, it is the highest taste, pronounced it c'el ho goo. Nor is the English behind with the French in such contractions; as muskidditi, Goddigodin, for much good may it do unto you, God give you a good evening.

Among Consonants some are called liquids, as l, m, n, r, and they are seldom cut off, as Mon Dieu, mon Roy, my God, my King, coeur content, a contented heart; here n and r keeps her full sound; besides, c at the end of words keeps his sound, as allez avec Dieu, Go with God, avec moy, with me, and sometimes this c in avec is wantonly turned to que, as aveque toy, aveque vous; f and g also at the end of words are not cut off, as le bon bœuf d'Angleterre, the good beef of England, le joug de Christ est leger, Christ's yoke is easie.

B is pronounced as in English, and is always cut off at the end of words, as palomb a ring-dove, plomb lead, are pronounced palom, plom.

C before e, i, y, sounds like s, as cecine Martlemas beef, cipricimi quickly; as also when it hath a tail, as ça, ça, courage, on, on, courage; ch is pronounced also like sh, as Charls Sharls, cheval, a horse, steval, except some proper names, as Chanaan, and these four, Cholere cholier, Chorde a chord, Elchole a schoole, Cichoree succory.

C before t is also cut off, as du diët au fait y a un gran trait, there's a huge distance betwixt the word and the deed, in which saying every c is cut off; c in second is pronounced like g.

D preceding another Consonant is seldom pronounced, save only in these, admettre to admit, admirer to wonder, administrer to administer, ad- verbe an adverb, adversaire an adversary, with their derivatives, ad- dresser to direct, Advent Advens, adroit fit and handson; when a word ends with d, and the next begins with a vowel or h, the d is pronounced like t, as lourd abus a grois abuse, galand homme a gallant man, vent au vilage rend un homme sage, wind in the vilage makes a man sage, in all these words the d is pronounced like t.

E in French is pronounced as in English, and at the ends of words is retained still its full sound, as bevez apres un œuf comin' apres un bœuf, drink after an egge as after an oxe.

G before e, i, y, hath a gentler and softer sound in French than in English, and is pronounced almost like a z, as genereux generous, giron the lap, gyrouet a fane, in these g h sh a melting soft pronunciation like z; when gn comes together the g is quite cut off, and the word is pronounced as if an i followed the n; as mignon a neat person, is pronounced minton, A la trogne cognoit on l'yurogne, By ones snout one knows a drunken lout; we must say tronie, yuronie.

H is omitted in words that come from the Latin, as honeste honest, huile oile, heure an hour, honneur honour, but in natural French words, h retains its aspiration, as hanter to hunt, halte haste, hardy stout, &c.

I coming before a single Consonant, is to be pronounced, atreffe high-ness, multitude, revolte, except tis a son, if it come before two Consonants 'tis cut off, as tiltre a tittle, aultre another, &c.

In the end of these words, fol a fool, mol soft, col a neck, it is pronounced like u, as fou, mou, tou.

M doth often degenerate into n, as nom a name, renom renown, faim hunger, temps time, Comte an Earl, in all these words the m is turned to n.

N is never pronounced in the third person plural of Verbs, be they of what Conjugation soever, as dansent they dance, parlent they speak, n is here eaten up.

P pronounced every where as in English.

Q retains its sound at the end of words, as Il saute du coq a l'af- ne, He leaps from the Cock to the Ass, a Proverb used against them that digress from their matter: qui, que, qua, and quo are pronounced like ke, ki, ka, and ko, as quarenta forty, quitter to leave, question question, quottizer to tax.

R some out of a laxie and soft feminine humour do leave off r at the end of words, as s'il vous voulez dormi chez nous vous me ferez gran plaisir, If you will sleep with us you will do me a great pleasure, but it is better pronounced than omitted.

S in words derived of the Latin in sto, tis, tus, stris, is always to be pronounced, as persister, contester, triste, illustre, except in prestre so lend, where it is cut off, yet in prelation it keeps its sound, as also in Vestiaire a Vestry, though it be cut off in vestir to cloath, and in Escar- latin, though it be cut off in Escarlats scarlets; and in Apostolique, though it be cut off in Apostre; it keeps its sound also in all proper names, as Auguste Augustin, except Escosse Scotland, Estienne Stephen, Hierolme Hierome, Crespin, in all these s is lost. S keeps its sound in all words that signifie the fashion of a people, as a la Morelique, after the the Moors manner; a la Turquesque, after the Turks manner; a la Greguesque, a la Barbareque, after the Greek and Barbary manner; as also in names of Sects, as Anabaptiste, Atheiste, Alchoraniste, Ma- hometiste, Sophiste; And lastly, in these ensuing words, most whereof have the Latin for their original, which are ranked according to the order of the Letters,

T as in English before ion is pronounced like c, as devotion, con- tention, and in the conjunction &c, 'tis never pronounced, though the next begin with a vowel, as Moy & Antoine & Eustace le moine soupçons ensemble, I and Anthony and Eustace the Frier de sup roge- ther.

X is pronounced in French as in English, but in these and all other nu- meral words it is pronounced like z, deux two, deuxième the second, dix ten, dixième the tenth, six six, sixième the sixth, yet in soix- ante sixty, it is pronounced like s. In the end of words x is pronounced like z, as paix peace, prix price, are pronounced paiz, priz, and as in this saying, Aux faux jaloux deux yeux crevez, Of him who is cause- lessly jealous pull out both his eyes; in all these words x is pronounced like z, yet in this word perplex perplexed, x keeps her sound, and in vexer to vex.

X hath this singularity above all other his fellows, to have the sound of two Consonants, viz. c s, which being so, an ill favour'd Anagram might be made of uxor a wife, for orcus bell were a true Anagram to it. — Uxor & Orcus idem.

Z is pronounced as in English, as Il ne vaut pas un zelt, he is not worth the film of a kernell. It is to be observed, that when z concludes a word, it makes the precedent vowel grave and long, as chantez sing ye, dancez dance ye, and so all second persons plural of Verbs, celui qui est adonné aux dez, le diable le tire par le nez, he who is given to dice, the devil leads him by the nose. Observe that s doth very frequently de- generate into z, but z not into s.

Thas much of the original and simple materials of the French Lan- guage, viz. of the Letters, of their pronunciation, and of the cutting off of Consonants, but let it be specially observed, that where a Conso- nant is cut off, the precedent vowel must be pronounced with more gravity and longer, as waltin a mastif, where the s is cut off, is pronounced longer than a in matin the morning, as also e in teste the head, than e in tete a dudge.

This small crooked Character 9, (which I have not read observed by any Grammarian) hath been in former times much used in the French Or- thography, it useth to be put at the beginning of a word, and then it stands for con, as Tout va a 9 trepoil for contrepoil, All goes clean ham. Then it useth to be put at the end of a word, and stands for in, as Domin 9 Des mes, for Dominus Dema mem, like this Greek Character 9 which stands for omicron and sigma, as 9i 9 for 9i 9.

Of a Noun.

Nouns are commonly } Le the, and un a, are for the Masculine. } Plur. les, the.
joyned with Articles. } La and une for the Feminine.

The French, as also the Italian and Spanish, with all other vulgar Languages, have certain prepositive Articles which they put before their Nouns, which the Latine hath not, and they are le, and un; they correspond with our the and a in English, and they go before Substantives, and Adjectives, as Le grand Turc, The grand Turk; these Articles are most necessary to be known in all their Cases, as followeth, and there are more er- rors committed by their misapplication, than by any other way.

The declining of Nouns is made by Prepositions, the Accusative case being always like the Nominative, and the Ablative like the Genitive.

These Arti- cles serve	In the Singu- lar number to the	Genitive	De le before a vowel, as de l'immortel.
		Dative	Du before a consonant, as du roy.
	In the plu- ral number to the	Dative	A le before a vowel, as l'immortel.
		Ablative	Au before a consonant, as au roy.
		Genitive	Des, as des hommes, of men.
		Dative	Aux, as aux hommes, to men, or to the men.
		Ablative	A les, as a les femmes, to the women.
		Ablative	A des, as a des femmes, to some women.
		Ablative	Aux, as aux champs, in the fields.
		Ablative	Des, as des cieulx, from the heavens.

Forming of the plural number.

The Plural number is formed from the Singular, by putting to s or z, as roy roys, lettré lettrez; except words that end in s, x, or z, whose Singular and Plural are one; as le pais and les pais, le faix and les faix, le filz and les filz. A Country, a burden, a son.

Words ending in l, change l into ux; as cheval, chevaux; mal, maux; metal, métaux; Except these irregulars, ciel, cieux; celui, ceux; oeil, yeux; vieil, vieux; genouil, genoux.

Words ending in a consonant in the Plural lose the sound of their consonant; Grec, Grecs; as if it were Gres; except they end in a liquide; as bal, bals; nom, noms; don, dons; jour, jours.

Genders of Nouns Substantives.

Nouns are all of the masculine gender, except 1. the names of women, and offices to them belonging; as mere, nourrice; names of fruits; as une poire; of Cities; as Clermont, Marseille.

2. Substantives in é Masculine, as bouté; except blé, congé, clergé; and such as come from Latin words in atus; as Duché, Compté, marché.

3. Substantives in e Feminine, as grace; Except words coming from Masculines and Neuters in Latin, as pere, livre, titre; office, sacrifice. Yet these are Feminines, lexive, réponse; image, rage, table, fable.

4. Substantives in eur, as douceur; except pleur, labeur, heur, with his compounds, bonheur, malheur.

5. Nouns in on, as affection, prison, chanson; except horizon, tison; and words ending in sion, as poisson.

6. Substantives in u, vertu, tribu; except festu.

7. Nouns in ix, as paix, voix, noix, poix, for pitch; except prix.

8. These are also Feminines, mercy, loy, peau, soif, clef, nef, fain, mois, nonnain, putain, sin, façon, leçon, mer, toux, tour for a tower, otherwise not; brebis, perdrix, jument, forest, dent, part, hart, mort, cour.

Observe that there is no Neuter Gender in the French Tongue, but the Masculine stands instead of it; when an Adjective is used for a Substantive, it hath always le before it. as le long du bord de la riviere, along the banks of the river; le peu de soin quel vous avez de moy, the small care you have of me; Je vous rendray le double, I will return you double, &c.

Some words are of the Masculine and Feminine gender, but then they change their sense, as le page is a page, la page the side of a leaf; le manche is a handle, la manche a sleeve; le tour a turn, la tour a tower; le voile a veil, la voile a sail; le coche a coach, la coche a sow, as Voyla une coche dans un coche, Behold a sow in a coach; le haste a spear, la haste haste; le Satyre a wood-god, la Satyre an invective; le poisse a Canopy, la poisse a frying-pan; le periode the end or declining, la periode the end of a sentence; le livre a book, la livre a pound; le temple a Church, la temple the temple of the head; le trompette a trumpeter, la trompette a trumpet; enseigne an Ensign-bearer, mase, enseigne an Ensign, fem,

Of Adjectives.

Genders of Nouns Adjectives.

Adjectives form the Feminine gender, by putting to e feminine, as hault, haulte, high, caché, cachée, bid, except it end e feminine, for then it is common to both genders, as homme honorable, l'eau trouble, troubled water.

Exception.

1. Adjectives in c, turn c into ch, as sec, dry seche, except Grec, Grecque; Duc, Duchesse, Clerc, Clergesse.
2. Words in eau change eau into elle, as beau fair, belle; puceau a maid, pucelle; nouveau new, nouvelle.
3. Words in eux make the feminine in euse, as pitieux, pitieuse, Roux red, maketh rousse; faux false, faulx; doux sweet, douce; frais fresh, fraiche.
4. Words in f change f into v, as brief short, brieve; restit tyr'd, restive; pensif thoughtful, pensive.
5. Words in eur make the feminine in euse, as flatteur, flatteuse; menteur a liar, menteuse; jeureur a swearer, jeureuse; pecheur a sinner, maketh pecheresse.
6. These double their consonant, bas low, basse, bon good, bonne, net neat, nette, quel, quelle, tel, telle, bel, belle. Wrote note also, that bel is put before a vowel, as bel homme, beau before a Consonant, as beau garçon, a handsome boy. So nouveau is put before the Substantive, as le nouveau Testament, feminine nouvelle; but neuf, and the feminine neuve, after the Substantive, as In College neuf.

Touching the comparative and superlative degrees of Adjectives, in French they are expressed by plus more, and tres, placing them both before the positive, as plus sage more wise, tres sage most wise, plus vaillant more valiant, tres vaillant most valiant. But these following are excepted, bon good, meilleur better, mauvais bad, pire worse, petit little, moindre less; as also these Adverbs, bien well, mieux better, mal ill, pis worse, peu a little, moins less, beaucoup much, d'avantage more, par trop a great deal too much.

There be some Superlatives form'd according to the Latine, as serenissime most gracious, grandissime most mighty, reverendissime most reverend, illustrissime most excellent, doctissime most learned; but they must be always pronounced long, with the Emphasis upon the last syllable saving one. There is another kind of phrase used in French after the comparative, which some hold not to be so elegant, as la France est plus fertile que non pas l'Espagne, France is more fertile than Spain; Vous avez mieux parle maintenant, que vous ne fistes pas hier, you have spoke better now, than you did yesterday. Bien also and tort are put before Adjectives to make them superlatives, as Je suis vostre bien affectionné serviteur, or vostre fort affectionné, I am your affectionate servant.

Among all other nations the English put the Adjective before the Substantive, which no other use to do; yet in French there be some Adjectives that are better before than behind, as bon good, beau fair, brave brave, as qui a bon voisin a bon matin, He that hath a good neighbour hath a good morrow; beau chevalier a handsome Knight; brave capitain a brave Captain; as also all Adjectives which imply honour or dishonour, as c'est un vaillant soldat, He is a valiant souldier; c'est un honnête gentilhomme, He is an honest gentleman, &c. but there be some Adjectives which are never put before, as pain blanc white bread, pain bis brown bread, vin clair et claret wine, vin rouge red wine; lastly, there be divers Adjectives that may be placed indifferently before or behind.

Of a Pronoun.

JE, tu, il, ilz, are put when the Ve b is expressed; as je chante I sing, tu joues thou playest, il frappe he strikes, ilz ont. But moy, toy, luy, eux, are put when the Verb is not expressed; as Qui ha fait cecy? Who hath done this? answer moy, not je; toy, not tu. So Qui ha fait cela? Answer luy or eux; not il or ilz. Je is thus declined.

Ablat. de moy.		Ablat. de nous.	Dat. à soy, &c.

Nom. il or luy, he.	Pluraliter	Nom. Ilz, eulx, ou leur, they.
Gen. de luy.		Gen. d'eulx, de leur.
Dat. à luy and luy.		Dat. à eux, leur, leurs.
Accus. le and luy.		Accus. ilz, eulz, les.
Ablat. de luy.		Ablat. d'eux, leurs.

Luy is common to both Genders, and signifieth to him, or her, as ma mere m'a demandé, & je luy ay répondu. My mother asked for me, and I answered her. Leur likewise signifieth to them in both Genders, as je leur ay baillé, I gave it them, both men and women. But leur with an Article is a Noun possessive, as le leur theirs. Eux is sometimes put for soy the reciprocal, as ils ont tous biens communs entre eux for entre soy, they have all goods common between them.

Ce and Cest this, plur. ces, Ce before a Consonant, as ce garçon. Cest before a vowel, as Cest homme.

Celuy that man, cestuy this man, iceluy the same man; plur. ceux and iceux, feminin. celle and icelle, are thus placed in the sentence: Celuy goeth before qui, and ice-
(22) luy

The French Grammar.

luy repeats it as its relative, as celui qui seme mauvaise semence, iceluy recueille mauvais grain, He that soweth ill seed, that man gathereth ill grain.

Mesme.

Mesme is joyned to Nouns and Pronouns, and is as much as self in English, or met in Latin, like egomet, ipsemet; as l'homme mesme, the self same man; moy mesme, my self; luy mesme, himself.

Mon, ton,
son.

These Possessives, mon, ton, son, noz, voz, are put when the Substantive is expressed; as mon livre, my book, noz livres, our books. But mien, tien, sien, nostres, vostres, are put without the Substantive, having always an Article joyned with them; as, à qui est ce livre?
Whose book is this? We may either say, il est à moy, or elle, c'est le mien, it is mine, les nostres. Noz amis, & les vostres, our friends and yours.

Of a Verb.

As there can be no Syllable without a Vowel, no Word without a Syllable, no Sentence without Words; so neither Words nor Sentences can have sense, at least any perfect sense, without a Verb, which may be said to animate both, and this part of speech swayeth most of any in the Language of men.

There are three sorts of Verbs,

The first is Active, when the effect or product of the action signified by the Verb, passeth from the Agent to the Patient, which the Latins call transitive Verbs, as Nature fuit l'vuide, Nature abhors a vacuum; Je crain-dray Dieu, I will fear God.

The second is Reciprocal or reflected, when that which is meant by the Verb is not transferred to another thing or person, but glanceth back upon the Agent himself, as Je me plais à la cavallerie, I love horsemanship; Il se delecte à apprendre François, He delights to learn French.
This Verb hath sometimes the sense of a Verb Passive.

The third sort is Neuter, which must have the help of an auxiliary, and herein doth not much differ from the reciprocal.

There are two Verbs to whom all the rest are beholden;
therefore are they called Auxiliaries, they are Avoir to have, and Estre to be: Avoir deserves to have the van, because he helps to conjugate also his fellow auxiliary verb Estre, and himself also into divers Tenses; the difference betwixt these two is, that the first is an Active Auxiliary, the other a Passive: whosoever is covetous of the French Language, one of the prime tasks must be to have these two Verbs exactly by heart.

Besides the former divisions of Verbs, they admit of a subdivision into Regular and Irregular. Of Regular Verbs there are, as in Latin, four Conjugations which are to be distinguished, though some do it otherwise, according to the order of the letters; the first terminate in er, as abandonner to forsake; the second in ir, as punir to punish; the third in re with an o before, as Croire to believe; the fourth in re with some consonant before, as craindre to fear: These four examples following, in parler to speak, bâtir to build, voir to see, convoitre to know, may serve for all others to conform themselves unto.

The first Conjugation is of Verbs ending in er, as parler to speak.

Concerning the forming of Tenses. The Imperfect of the Indicative is formed from the first person plural of the Present, changing ons into oy, as chantons, je chantoy. The first and second persons plural in the Present of the Optative, and the Imperfect of all Moods, interpose i, in all Conjugations, as Aimaions, aimassions, amerions.

The second of the Imperative, is from the first of the Indicative of all Conjugations, as Di tu, tell thou, reçois tu receive thou, &c. The third from the third plural of the same tense, by taking away nt, as ils donnent, qu'il donne, &c. Some be irregular, as qu'il sache, qu'il sache, from font, and sçavent.

The Present of the Optative, from the third of the Imperative everywhere. The Imperfect from the second singular of the Aorist, tu leus, je leusse.

The Imperfect of the Subjunctive, from the Future of the Indicative, by changing ay into oy, as j'aymeray, j'aymeroy.

The Participle present from the first plural of the present of the Indicative, changing ons into ant, as battillons, battissant.

A Verb Passive.

A Verb Passive is made of putting the Participle of any Verb to the persons of the Verb je suis, tu es, il est aimé, nous sommes, vous êtes, ils sont aimez, Imperfect. j'estoye aimé, nous étions aimez, &c.

Note also, that the third persons in both numbers are passively to be rendered, when se is set before them, as il se fait it is done, ilz se font they are made.

A Verb Impersonal.

1. Active is made by putting il before the third person, as il convient 'tis fit, il convenoit, il faut it must, il falloir, il fallust, il ha fallu, il faudra, &c. Such are these il neige it snoweth, il gresse it baileth, il gele it freezeeth, il rele it thaweth, il avelsprit it waketh night, il pleut it raineth.

2. Passive is made by putting on, or lon before the third persons singular of Verbs Actives, as on dit, dicatur, it is said, or men say, on aime, amatur, men love, on amoit, on aimast, &c.

Here 'tis to be noted that il cannot be put before all Verbs whatsoever, but on and l'on may; except some few which will have only il for their user, as il faut, it must, il chaut 'tis car'd for, il reste it remains, il convient 'tis fit; these cannot endure on or lon.

The Anomala or irregular Verbs of the first Conjugation.

Aller, to go.

Of the first Conjugation there is only one auxiliar Verb, Aller, to go. Present tense. Je vay, or je vas, tu vas, il va, nous alloas, vous allez, ils vont. Imperf. J'alloy, tu allois, &c. Aorist. J'allay, tu allas, &c. Preteris. Je suis allé, tu es allé. Plusquam perfect. J'estoye allé, &c. Futur. J'ira, tu iras, il ira, nous irons, vous irez, ils iront. Imperat. Va tu. Qu'il aille, or qu'il voise, allons, allez, qu'ils aillent, or qu'ils voient. Optat. Pres. Dieu vueille que

b

Guere,

The French Grammar.

Guere, or gaire. Much. This word is never put without a negative, as Il n'y a guere, for Il n'y ha beaucoup de temps. There is not much time past since, or not long since.

Huy. Whence come. Aujourd d'huy. To day. Mefhuy. A while ago.

Oncques or onc. Ever. It is always put with a Negative, as Je ne vionques, I never saw.

Pieça, as it were piece ha. Long ago; or, it is a good piece, or space of time since.

A ceste heure.
Presentement. } Now.
Incontinent.

All these will admit of tout all, before them, as tout a cest'heure, which is used to be contracted a'heure, and is the most in use now, or tout a l'heure, now presently. Tost, quickly, tantost presently, tousiours always, jamais never, pour jamais, a tout jamais for ever; lors then, deslors since then, soudainement suddenly, après after, peu après a little after; quelques fois sometimes, souventesfois, maintes fois oftentimes; d'icy en avant, a l'advenir, pour l'advenir hereafter.

Ens, Within, as ceans, for cy ens: here within; Leans, for li ens; there within.

Fors for hors, as fors que cela; Except that, for hors mis cela. As in Gloucestershire they likewise say, out-set that, for except that.

Illec. There (out of use.) Vis a vis, Over against. Où where, d'où whence, par où which way, cy icy here, d'icy from hence, par icy this way; ça, de ça hither, là de là there, par de ça on this side, par de là on that side.

ça is used also as an Interjection, and is as much as give, or bring; as ça ce cheval give me that horse, ça cela give me that.

C'est mon. It is true; or, yea indeed; as much as vrayement. Sometimes it is an Interrogative, as mon in Greek; as aſavoir mon s'il le feroit. To wit, whether he would do it yea or no. Voire yea.

Ouy yes, si so'is, ouy dâ yes forsooth, voirement yea. c'est mon.

Non, non dâ no forsooth, nullement by no means. If a Negative go before, si is commonly us'd with a Verb adjoined, as vous ne mangez pas you eat not, si fay yes but I do; vous songez you dream, non fay no but I do not.

Moreover, when we assent to any thing spoken of, we use si as affirmative, vous êtes François, you are a Frenchman, si suis je yes I am.

The French is full of double Negations, or words implying double Negations, as je ne vous vis jamais, verbum'is, I saw you not never, je n'ay rien caché, I have not hid nothing, which makes strangers that use simple Negations to commit errors often, by omitting the Negative Adverb ne as j'ay rien caché, j'ay rien appris, instead of je n'ay, &c.

Ne and ni, nor, are used indifferently, as je ne trouve ni rime ni raison en votre dire, or ne rime ne raison, I find neither rime nor reason in your speech; nul and personne are taken often indifferently for no body.

Nani, or nenny, or Nanin. No. Hola, or hau. To which they commonly answer. Plaist il? What is your pleasure?

Pleust a Dieu, or à la mienna volonté. I would to God.

O avant. Forward, forward. Sus, or sus. Go to. Lala. There there.

Fois, which is always added to some Noun of number, une fois once, or one time; deux fois twice; tant de fois, so many times.

Bellement softly, tout beau gently, doucement tout doux.

Promptement, viste, vistelement, quickly.

Assurement, de vray, pour vray, sur ma vie on my life, en bonne foy in good faith.

Au rebours, au contraire, a contrepoil, a l'opposite, clean ham, clean contrary.

D'avanture, de cas fortuit, par hazard, par fortune.

Beaucoup, moult, Much. Prou, from the Latine word Probè, signifieth much; as when they say, Vir probè doctus; a man very learned. Bon prou leur face. Much good may sit do them. And in this sense they use bien and fort; as the Latines have their valde from valide. Homme bien ſçavant, or fort docte, A man very learned. Note that moult and prou, are now out of use.

Conjunctions.

ET, which never soundeth neither before Consonants, Copulatives, or Vowel. Ainsy que, even as. C'est à ſçavoir, namely; or that is to wit, that is to say.

Davantage. Moreover. Si, if. Sinon que, But that, or except that. Pendant Conditionals, que, or tandis que, whiles that. Pourveu que. Provided that.

Combien que, or jaçoit que, Albeit that. Ains, or Discretives, or ainçois. Tea rather. Toutes fois. Notwithstanding. Adversitives. Neantmoins, Nevertheless. These which Ramus makes Discretives, Stephanus will have to be Adversatives.

Où, either; when it is put without an accent; but Disjunctives. when it is accented, it is, saith Serreius, an Adverb of place; as où est il? where is he.

Dont. Whereupon. Doncq, or Doncques. Then Illatives, or therefore. Bartant. Wherefore. Rationals.

Car. For, from the Greek γαρ Parce que, or pour Causals, autant que. Forasmuch as. Ainsy que, tant que, d'autant que, pource because, parquoy whereby.

Prepositions.

Pres, after. Arriere, behind. Chez, at; as chez nous, at our house. Chez eux, at their house. Deça, on this side. Delà, on that side, or beyond. Dessus, upon. Dessous, under. Vers, or envers towards. Juques, until. Selon, according to, &c.

Syntaxis of Nouns.

Adjectives, especially those that signifie colour, are put after their Substantives, as vin blanc, white wine, vin claret, claret wine, pain bis, brown bread. These are set before the Substantives, bon, beau, belle; nouveau, nouvelle; mauvais, petit; as petit homme, mauvaise femme.

The Adjective agreeth with his Substantive in gender; as mon pere my father, ma mere, my mother. Yet if the Substantive begin with a vowel, they put an Adjective Masculine before it, as mon espée my sword, mon hollesse: Except in amie, or if the word begin with h, when it is sounded with aspiration, as ma hauteur my height.

When two Substantives come together, the latter is put in the Genitive case, L'argent du Prince est sujet à la pince, the Prince his money is subject to the Pincer. Sometimes one of the Substantives is taken away by Ellipsis, as à la Saint Jean, la Toussaints, where the word Feste is understood.

Adjectives of desiring or plenty, or carefulness, and their contraries govern a Genitive case, as riche d'argent, rich in money, nonchalant de son prouffit careless of his profit.

Comparatives govern a Genitive case, as la face n'est plus grande de demy pied, the face is no bigger then half a foot. Sometimes, que serveth to the Comparative, as plus blanc que neige whiter then snow.

Of Verbs.

The Infinitive with an Article becometh a Noun Substantive, le boire estaint la soif drinking stancheth thirst, for le boisson drink.

When two Verbs come together, the latter is the Infinitive mood, as je veux aimer I will love. Sometimes the principal Verb is understood, as le mastins de courir, & nous d'aller apres. 1. commencerent, & nous commençames.

The Nominative case goeth before the Verb. Except the question be asked, as iray je? shall I go? as tu? hast thou?

The Accusative followeth the Verb, j'aime mon maître: except me, te, se, luy, leur, nous, vous, as tu te brises thou dost value thy self, il se tourmente he torments himself, je luy diray I will tell him, je leur escriray I will write to them: Except it be the Imperative Mood, as batteze. Moy, toy, soy, are also put after the Imperative Mood, as well for the Dative as the Accusative, as di-moy tell me, leve-toy, rise up.

Me, te, se, are put before the Participle en, especially before Verbs Neuters, signifying moving to a place, as j'e men vay, va t'en, fui t'en, ilz s'en sont aller. Sometimes a Verb hath two Pronouns before it, as vous vous corroutez fort, you anger your self much, one the Nominative, the other the Accusative case; or else the Verb is placed between them, as Comme vous portez vous? Sometimes there are three, as vous vous en irez vous?

Some Verbs being construed with an Infinitive Mood, cause it to be rendred Passively, as je vous feray battre, I will make you be beaten.

The French Grammar.

beaten ; faites faire chemin, cause room to be made ; je le veu mettre en prison, I saw him put in prison.

The Verb aller is elegantly construed with a Participle, as il s'en al-loit disant, i. il disoit ; il s'en va mourant, i. il meurt, he is a dying.

A Participle added to je suis, to make a Preterperfect tense, may vary both Gender, and Number, as je suis venu ; elle est venue ; nous sommes venus. Tus being added to j'ay, it changes not its termination, as j'ay dîné, elle a dîné, nous avons dîné. Tes if a Substantive go before the Nominative case and the Verb, the Participle following is rendered Passively, and agrees in Gender and Number with that Substantive, as les grâces que Dieu nous a données ; les corps que la mer a engloutis, the blessings which God hath given us, the bodies which the sea hath swallowed.

Of Adverbs.

N the Negative is always accompanied with point, or pas ; as il n'y est point, or pas, he is not there at all. And without either of these words it is equivalent to an affirmative, il est plus sçavant que ne sont ses compagnons ; he is more learned than are his fellows.

Dont is a Participle of Relation, and signifies as much as de que, de quoy, du quel, dequels ; as j'ay le livre dont vous parlez ; I have the book of which you speak.

Of Prepositions.

1. Standing between two Substantives, maketh the latter an Adjective, as homme à cheval, a horseman ; homme à pied, a footman ; escuelle à oreillons, a Porringer, or a dish with ea s.
2. Standing before the Denominative, it signifies as much as after the fashion : as à la Frantoise, after the French fashion ; à la Todesque, after the Dutch fashion. So en is used, as vivre en bestie, to live after the manner of a beast ; traité en Prince, entertained like a Prince ; Parler en Roy, to speak like a King.
3. Is put after an Adjective signifying aptness, or nimbleness, as vifte à l'escuf, nimble at the ball.
4. This Preposition à expresseth also the final cause for which a thing was made, as pot à vin, a wine pot, un esuy à peignes, a comb case, Terre à froment, a wheat Country. The difference between aux and es is this ; es signifies in the, viz. any thing one within another ; aux signifies any external application, and is more general.

The Preposition à.

1. Standing before a Substantive, it signifies either matter, as bague d'or, a gold ring ; or the instrument, as batte de verges, to beat with rods ; jouer de l'espinette, to play on the Virginals.
 2. It is put after Adjectives signifying dexterity, as habile de la plume, skilful at his pen ; habile de pied, active, or swift of foot.
 3. Standing before the Infinitive Mood, it is Englished to, as je vous prie de faire cela, I beseech you to do that.
 4. Du standing before a Substantive signifies part of any thing, and is Englished some, as du pain, some bread ;
des poissons, some fishes.
- De* being to both Genders, is used in indefinite phrases, as autorité de Roy, the Authority of a King ; Telle est misere d'homme, such is mans misery, poissons de mor : And hereby the want of Adjectives is supplied in

The Pre-
positions de & du.

French, in which point that Tongue is very penurious Though Monsieur, Madame, Mademoiselle, admit none but indefinite Articles, which is to be imputed to the Pronouns mon and ma ; yet these phrases are excepted ;
vous faites du monsieur, you play the monsieur ; voyla une frippone qui etranche de la dame, see how that baggage pranks is like a Lady.

Force taken for quantity endures no preposition after it, vous avez force ducats, you have abundance of crowns ; j'ay force travaux, I have good store of troubles ; de is put also sometimes before the Adverb bien, well, and becomes an Adjective ; as homme de bien an honest man, treshomme de bien a most honest man.

Devant is construed with que before an Infinitive, as Devant qu'aller, before we go. Après with the Preterperfect tense of the Infinitive mood, as après avoir reçu vos lettres, after the receiving of your Letters.

Aupres, Arrière à l'entour govern a Genitive case, as aupres du feu, near the fire, arrière de nous, behind us ; à l'entour de soy, round about himself.

Strangers are subject to commit errors oftentimes, in putting pour for, instead of de of, after some sort of words, as je vous remercie pour la courtoisie, I thank you for the courtesie, whereas they should say de la courtoisie ? So they use to say commonly, pour combien vendez vous ce cheval ? For how much do you sell this horse ? but this is neither good Latin nor good French, for acheter to buy, vendre to sell, loer to hire or let, marchander to trade, estimer and priser to value, &c. will have the thing, and the price of it in the Accusative case, without any preposition, as j'ay acheté ce cheval dix escus, I have bought this horse for ten crowns. Et je l'ay revendu a quinze, and I sold him again for fifteen. There is also another peculiar phrase of speaking in French, as combien faites vous ces gands, what sell you these gloves for ; and so all other commodities : yet avoir to have, and bailler or donner to give, admit of pour or a, as j'ay acheté ce chapeau a six escus, or pour six escus, I have bought this hat for six crowns ; j'ay baille vint escus pour ce cheval, I have given twenty crowns for this horse.

De is very frequently used in French for avec with, as Il entuera dix de la chandelle, & quinze du chandelier, he will slay ten with the candle, and fifteen with the candlestick ; a Proverb of a Braggadochian ; or Il est fourni d'entendement comm'un oylon de creste, He is furnished with understanding as a goose is with a crest. This observation is of great consequence to him who will speak good French.

Of French Interjections.

O encouragement, ça ça the e there, courage, pouffe boute pui on, hai avant beigh, on there, Avant on,
on, fus, fus up.

Of sorrow and weariness, ah, eh, ha, las, helas, alas,

Of joy, gay, alaigrement, dehaît, beighday, merrily.

Of stopping, holà, prou.

Interjec-
tions

Of En and Y, Pas and Point.

One of the greatest criticisms and difficultest thing in the French Language, is to make right use of these small Particles y and en, pas and point, therefore I have reserved them for the conclusion, and I shall in some measure endeavour to help the learner.

Y, is a Relative Particle coming near to the nature of the Dative, and en, to the Ablative case; both of them have sometimes local, sometimes real references; when y relates to a place, it commonly implies a going or removing thither, as va à l'église, go to Church, j'y iray tantôt, I will go thither presently. Y denotes sometimes an abiding in a place, as Le Roy est il à Londres? Is the King in London? Il y est, He is there, or Il n'y est pas, he is not there. Sometimes y signifies passing by a place, as j'y passeray, I will pass that way: When y refers to a precedent thing, it signifies an applying ones self unto it, or minding of it, as prenez garde à mon cheval, look to my horse, bien, j'y prendra garde, well, I will look to him; Vous parlerez bien tôt bon François car vous y employez en bon escient, you will quickly speak good French, for you ply it in good earnest.

En before a Verb is a Relative, before other parts of speech 'tis a Proposition; it refers also both to place and things like y; when it refers to a place, it denotes commonly a going out; therefore it hath a similitude with the Ablative case, as Viens tu du palais, doest thou come from the palace? ouy, j'en vien, yes, I come thence. When en hath no certain antecedent, it signifies moving to a place, as je m'en vay, I am going away. When en hath reference to a thing, it denotes some interest in it, as Nous jouons à la boule, en voulez vous estre? We are playing at Bowls, will you make one?

En refers also to quantity, as Pretez moy de l'argent si vous en avez, lend me some money if you have any; J'en ay à votre service, I have some at your service; combien avez vous de laquays, how many footmen have you? J'en ay trop, I have too many. En hath reference also to the efficient cause of things, as Il est si amoureux de Marguerite qu'il en perd le sens, He is so far in love with Marger, that he grows mad after her. En, refers also to material causes, as Je ramasse beaucoup de livres pour en faire une Bibliothèque, I gather many books to make thereof a Library.

Y and en are sometimes us'd together, if a certain Antecedent be expressed before the Verb, as j'ay esté à Londres & je m'y en retourne, I have been in London, and I return thither; Il a bouche à la Cour & il s'y en va. He hath bin diet at Court, and he goes thither.

The greatest difference I find 'twixt these two little particles, is, that y requires an Antecedent always to be expressed before: En needs it not sometimes, as je m'endors, I am falling asleep; beside, the one, as I said before, hath similitude with the Dative, the other with the Ablative case; both of them cause an apostrophe in the precedent word, if it end with a vowel. En is of a larger extent then y, for it signifies sometimes like or as, as parler en Philosophe, to speak like a Philosopher, Marcher en capitaine, to walk like a captain.

Pas and point which are so frequently us'd in the French Tongue, and so promiscuously serve only to make the negation fuller. Point is us'd when we speak of things having quantity, as Je n'ay point d'enfans, point de ducats, I have no children, no crowns; point also differs from pas, because it serves sometimes to make an absolute answer of its self, which pas cannot do, as avez vous d'argent? have you any money? point, none at all; pas doth more aptly conclude a simple negation, or a negation of quality or place, as Il n'y est pas, he is not there.

In conditional sentences we seldom use point or pas, as S'il vous n'aimez mon frere, je ne vous aimeroy tant, If you were not my brother, I would not love you so much. Besides we use not point and pas in sayings of advice, and of taking heed, as gardez vous que le fargeant ne vous attrappe, Take heed the Serjeant o'retake you not.

Observe if there be any other word that makes the negation fuller, point and pas are not used; such as rien nothing, jamais never, nul none, nullement not at all, onc or oncques, ever, aucun any, quelconque whatsoever; as je ne vous doy rien, I owe you nothing; je ne vous vis jamais, I never saw you, &c. Moreover when we use sçavoir for pouvoir to be able, or oser to dare, daigner to vouchsafe; as je ne sçaurois faire cela, I am not able to do that, je n'oserois entreprendre telle chose, I dare not undertake such a thing.

So much of the Monosyllables and petty enforcing Particles, which keep such a stir in the French Language; inasmuch that I may compare them to the fire upon the coach wheel in dry weather, that vauntingly said, Foh, what a deal of dust do I raise?

A Dia-

A Dialogue 'twixt Sylvander and Cloriman, consisting of some extraordinary and difficult critical Phrases which are meer Gallicisms, and pure Idioms of the French Tongue.

O Que je suis bien aise de vous voir en si bon point !
Sylvandre.
Cloriman.
 Je vous sçay bon gré, mais, qu'est ce que de moy, que vous en faites tant d'estat ?

Sylvandre.
 Vous êtes de mes amis les plus signalez & je m'aime fort en vostre compagnie, & cela pour de bonnes raisons.

Cloriman.
 Cela proceds seulement de vostre bonne opinion en mon endroit, mais assurez vous que vous me trouverez toujours prest pour vous rendre le reciproque.

Sylvandre.
 Je vous baise les mains, mais, ou est ce que vous tirez a'steure.

Cloriman.
 Je vay faire un tour de pourmenade, pour me desennuyer.

Sylvandre.
 J'iray quand & vous, y a il quelqu'un au jardin ?

Cloriman.
 Personne, je m'y trouveray tout a'steure.

Sylvandre.
 Tout beau, qu'apprenez vous de nouvelles de vosparens aux champs.

Cloriman.
 On m'a escrit que mon frere a passé le pas, & qu'il mourut un vray Chrestien.

Sylvandre.
 Las, que c'est peu de chose de nous quand il plait a Dieu, las que nous sommes miserables, mais son trespas me fasche pour nous avoir quitté en la fleur de son age.

Cloriman.
 Pour le mesme sujet j'en ay beaucoup de regret, & pour d'autres raisons.

Sylvandre.
 Se j'e'tois que de vous, j'iroye quand & quand pour consoler madame votre mere, car il y va de votre devoir.

Cloriman.
 Si feray je, Il y va aussi de mon interest, car on m'a dit qu'elle s'en va mourant de tristesse.

Sylvandre.
 Hastez vous y donc, & en votre absence s'il y a chose pour petite qu'elle soit qui vous puisse importer, de grace, servez vous de moy.

Cloriman.
 J'avois depuis peu un procez, mais graces a Dieu j'y ay remisy, de sorte que je n'ay gueres a faire a Paris.

Sylvandre.
 Vous êtes plus heureux que je ne suis, car j'y ay un procez de plus de trois ans ; Si est ce que le Juge angros vent ne le veut pas quider.

Cloriman.
 Il faut que vous ayez patience, tout vient a point qui veut attendre.

Sylvandre.
 Vous parlez en philosophe, me sauriez vous dire le quantième de ce mois avons nous aujourd'huy.

Cloriman.
 C'est le huitième de Septembre, & environ la Saint-Michel j'espere estre de retour, mais voy là venir Philippe, dont je suis bien aise.

Sylvandre.
 C'est mon : & bien d'ou venez vous ? s'il vous plaît, d'ou vient il que Paris vous a manqué si long temps ?

Philippe.
 Je vien de faire le tour de toute la France.

Sylvandre.
 Ma foy, il faut que vous ayez fort endurc de faire si longa voyagé, il faut que vous ayez bien dequoy.

Philippe.
 Quoy que je n'aye gueres vaillant, si estce que je n'eusse pas voulu pour trois fois autant que j'ay espendu, que je n'eusse pas fait ce voyage, j'ay ven tant de choses remarquables.

Sylvandre.
 Et bien qu'est ce que vous avez veu de plus signalé ?

Philippe.
 Vrayement c'est un beau pais que la France, ce seroit un discours infiny de vous dire tout, mais entre autres choses j'ay veu toutes les plus belles villes du Royaume, & j'ay observe qu'elles sont toutes posées sur des grandes & navigables rivières. comme les villes de Rouen & Paris sont situes sur la Seine, celles de Bour-

O How glad am I to see you well !
I thank you kindly, but what am I that you should esteem me so much ?

You are one of my special friends, and I delight much in your company, and that for good reason.

That proceeds merely from your good opinion of me, but assure your self that you shall find me always ready to requite you with the like.

I kiss your hands, but whither are you going now ?

I go to walk a turn to recreate my self.

I'll go along with you, is there any body in the garden ?

Not any body, I'll be there presently.

Go soft, what news have you from your friends in the Country ?

They have writ to me that my brother is dead, and that he died a true Christian.

Alas, what poor things are we when it pleaseth God ? Alas how miserable are we ? but his death troubleth me, because he left us in the flower of his youth.

For the same cause I am also much grieved, and for other reasons.

Were I as you, I would presently go to comfort the Gentlewoman your mother, for your duty calls you to it.

So I will, and my interest lies also therein, for I am told that she is likewise a dying of grief.

Hast thither then, and in your absence if there be any thing, be it never so little, that may concern you, I pray make use of me.

I had lately a suit in law, but thanks be to God I brought it to a good end, so that I have little to do now in Paris.

You are more happy then, for I have a suit three years old and more, yet the Judge with the great belly will not make an end of it.

You must have patience, all comes right to him that hath patience.

You speak like a Philosopher, can you tell me what day of the month this is ?

'Tis the eighth of September, and about Michaelmas I hope to be return'd, but there comes Philip, for which I am very glad.

'Tis he : well, whence come you Sir, may it please you ? what's the reason you have been so long absent from Paris ?

I come from travelling all France.

Faith, you must have crowns enough to make such long journies, you must have good means.

Alas though I am not very rich, yet I would not for thrice as much as I spent but I had made this journey, I have seen so many remarkable things.

Well, and what have you seen most remarkable ?

Truly France is a brave Country, it were an infinite discourse to tell you all, but among other things I saw all the fairest Towns of France, and I have observ'd that they are situated upon great and navigable Rivers ; as the Towns of Rouen and Paris are placed upon the River Seine, those of Bourdeaux and Tbolouse upon the Garonne ; that of deaux & Tholouse sur la Garonnè, celle de Lion, avec d' autres, sur deux rivières c'est à sçavoir la Rohne & la Saulne, celles d'Amiens & Abbeville sur la Some, celles d'Orleans, Blois, Tours, Saumur & Nantes sur la Loire.

J'ay veu aussy tous les Cours de Parlements, comme Troyes en Champagne, Dijon en Burgogne, Aix en Provence, Grenoble en Dauphiné, Rennes en Bretagne, Bourdeaux en Gascogne, Rouen en Normandie, & Paris pour l'Isle de France, pour la Picardie, & tous le pays jusques a Lion.

Sylvandre.

Vraiment c'est bien voyagé, mais où est-ce que vous vous acheminez maintenant ?

Philippe.

Je vâ a la Cour, pour tendre mes devoirs au Roy mon maître, est il long temps que vous l'avez veu ?

Sylvandre.

Il n'y a gueres, & je vous assure c'est le plus adroit Prince, & le plus puissant pour son âge que la France a eü jamais.

Philippe.

Monsieur, voicy l'heure qui m'appelle au depart, c'est pourquoy je m'en vay prendre congé de vous.

Sylvandre.

Monsieur, Je vous remercie bien fort, & vous supplie d'une chose, c'est que nous nous puissions revoir deux Jours d'icy, Philippe.

Monsieur, toutes & quantes fois qu'il vous plaira me faire tant de bien.

Sylvandre.

Puis que vous y allez, obligez moy de presenter mes baisemains a tous nos amis a la Cour.

Philippe.

Si feray-je, ne passez pas donc plus outre, car vous estes trop ceremonieux, & vous sçavez que la loy ceremonielle est abrogée long tems y à.

Sylvandre.

Monsieur, pour moy j'amerois mieux estre trop ceremonieux, que trop prophane ; Adieu, en vous remerciant.

Observe, That in so short a Dialogue, which relates meerly to some peculiar phrases, and modes of speaking that are proper only to the French Language, and not rendible verbatim, in any other, there could not have been expected such choice and substantial matter as might have been couched in a loose and free Discourse.

J. H.

Observe that one of the main tasks of the late Academy of Wits in Paris, is to retrench the superfluous letters, whereof the French Language is fuller then any other ; as will appear in this following Example.

L'Apostre Saint Paul en ses Epistres nous advertit, que le droit chemin pour parfaitement cognoistre nostre Souverain seigneur est de nous accoustumer a bien faire, & d'écouter la tres-sainte Escriture, qui nous rend tesmoignage de luy, & de frequenter l'Eglise son espouse, la quelle nous fera paroistre les esmerveillables effets de l'amour qu'il nous montre chaque moment : Elle nous esclairira aussy en la cognoissance de nostre Redempteur & nous fera desdaigner le monde avec un vray desgout, & mepriser nous memes & les esbats de cette vie, avec un gran desplaisir & mecontentement, & nous fera apprester pour le temps de nostre trespas, en nous remplissant de doux soupirs. Les esprits subtils & deliez qui ayment plutost l'ecole de la nature, peut estre ne se soucieront gueres de cest' avis, qui touche l'estat de leur ames, au quel il n'y a rien d'egal, &c.

According to the refined French you write him.

L'Apotre St. Paul en ses Epitres nous avérte que le droit chemin pour parfaitement conoitre notre souverain seigneur est de nous accoustumer a bien faire, & d'écouter la tresainte Escriture qui nous rend temoignage de luy, & de frequenter L'Eglise son Espouse, la quelle nous fera paroistre les emerveillables effets de l'amour qu'il nous montre chaque moment ; Elle nous eclairira aussy en la conoissance de notre Redempteur, & nous fera dedaigner le monde avec un vray degout, & mepriser nous memes & les ebas de cette vie avec un gran desplaisir & mecontentement, nous faisant appreter pour le temps de notre trespas en nous remplissant de doux soupirs. Les esprits subtils & deliez qui ayment plutot l'ecole de la nature, peut estre ne se soucieront gueres de cet' avis, qui touche l'etat de leur ames, auquel il n'y a rien d'egal, &c.

Englisbed thus.

The Apostle Saint Paul in his Epistles, doth advertise us, that the right way to know perfectly our Sovereign Lord, is to accustom our selves to do well, and to hear the holy Scripture, which gives testimony of him, and to frequent the Church his Spouse, who will make appear unto us the marvellous effects of the love he shows us every moment ; she will also enlighten us in the knowledge of our Redeemer, and make us disdain the world with a true distast, and despise our selves, and the sports of this life, with a great displeasure and discontentment, and make us prepare our selves for the time of our death, by filling us with sweet sighings. The subtil and nimble spirits that love rather the school of Nature, will not peradventure care much for this counsel, that concerns the state of their souls, which nothing can equal, &c.

In the second French Example, you may observe by collating it with the first, sundry consonants cut off, which the late Refiners of the French Language do allow of ; as also any other Letter that is us'd to be written and not pronounced ; especially if the word be derived from the Latin, may be omitted, according to the rules of the modern Orthography.

Thus have you the Rudiments and chief Fundamentals of the French Tongue, which may fit you for the following Dictionary, and afterwards as you make a further progresse in the Language, you may consult longer Grammars whereof there are divers, among whom I hold Maupus to be the exactest and most Scholar like, where you shall find things illustrated, and exemplified more at large ; yet there are no precepts so punctual, but much must be left to Observation, which is the grand Mistress that guides and improves the understanding in the research and pursuit of all humane knowledge.

Quod deficit in precepto, suppleat Observatio.

J. H.

To

RIGHT HONOURABLE

And my very good Lord and Master,

Sir William Cecil, K^t.

Lord Burghly, and Son and Heir apparent unto the Earl of EXETER.

Here present unto your Lordships view, an account of the expence of many hours, which in your service, and to mine own benefit might have been otherwise imployed: for sloth howsoever had not consumed them; somewhat I must have done the whilst; nor could I have bestowed them on a work of less use for your Lordship, the French being already so well understood by you, and all yours. In which regard, as I am particularly bound to acknowledge your Lordships goodness, bearing with my humour to follow, and allowing me time to finish it; so have all they to whom it shall prove of any worth, just cause to honour in your Lordship that goodness continued a long time unto their, and the common good. No private consideration was fit to make your Lordship often to dispense with the ordinary attendance of an ordinary servant. But this is one of the least of your Lordships respects to the Publick; and I would be loth to ingage your Judgment, or Honour, on the success of some an a Piece. My desires have aimed at more substantial marks; but mine eyes failed them, and forced me to spend out much of their vigour on this Bundle of words; which though it may be unworthy of your Lordships great patience, and perhaps ill sorted to the expectation of others, yet is it the best I can at this time make it, and were, how perfect soever, no more then due to your Lordship, to whom I owe, for what I have been many years, whatsoever I am now, or look to be hereafter.

Your Lordships

most bounden Servant

Au favorable Lecteur François.

Lecteur, l'Auteur de ce livre (Gentilhomme Anglois, à qui son propre Pays & sur tout, le notre ont une obligation particuliere, qu'ilz ont à peu d'autres) apres avoir peniblement veillé & travaillé par plusieurs ans, sur cet œuvre, non moins, certes, ingrat que laborieux ; En fin est contraint de le laisser partir de ses mains, plutot vaincu de l'importunité de ses Amis, & de la necessité que le public en a, que satisfait en son ame de son propre ouvrage. Et t'assure que si on l'eut voulu croire, il fût encore apres à se tourmenter, pour trouver la signification de telz mots, qui, possible, ne seront jamais plus ouyz en ce monde (quoy que luz) & dont, je croy, il n'y a personne qui ait ouy parler depuis cent ans, que luy ; tant sa curiosité a été grande & exacte à lire toute sorte de livres, vieuz & nouveuz, & de tous noz dialectes. A cette cause, peur, possible, qu'ayant égard à ce que tu voys, non à ce que tu ne voys pas, tu l'accuses plutot de ce qu'il a dit, que de ce qu'il a été contraint de laisser ; qui toutefois seroit un tresor inestimable, s'il oût pu trouver, ou pardeça, ou en France mesmes (où il a été si curieux d'envoyer expres) qui l'eut pu, ou voulu resoudre de ses doutes ; Il te supplie bien fort, si tu trouves icy quelques mots qui te sonnent mal aux oreilles, ou mesme qui n'y aient encore jamais sonné, de croire, qu'ils ne soient point de son invention, mais recueilliz de la multitude & diversité de noz Auteurs, que possible tu n'auras pas encore luz, & qui, tant bons que mauvais, desirent tous d'estre entenduz. Il pouvoit bien citer le nom, le livre, la page, & le passage, mais ce n'eut plus icy été un Dictionaire, ains un Labirinte. Ceuz qui ne les sauront, pas, les apprendront ; Ceux qui les sauront, jugeront bien que l'ignorance, possible, d'un seul mot, soit substancial, metaforique, inusite, ou tiré de la varieté des Ars, peut souvent obscurcir tout un sens, & rendre barbares les conceptions les plus gentilles. Permis à qui voudra d'en user, ou de les laisser ; Bien entendu, toutefois, que ce ne seroit pas le pis qui nous pût arriver, que de remettre suz, certains mots sur-annez, que nous avons mieuz aimé laisser perdre, quoy que tres propres & significatifs ; Et autres de notre propre cru, bien que de divers terroir, allans plutot mandier chez les Etrangers pour nous exprimer, ou bien nous taisans du tout, ou parlans par un long contournement de paroles, que d'ouvrir un peu la bouche pour en prononcer quelques uns qui sembloient trop reveches pour la douceur du palais de noz Damoiselles, ou grater l'oreille delicate de Messieurs noz Courtisans de ce tems-cy. Quant aux fautes de l'Impression, l'Autheur ne les peut totalement prendre sur soy, ne niant pas qu'il n'en soit eschapé assez, comme aussi possible en quelques endroits, quelque impropre interpretation ; esperant bien toutefois, que les unes ny les autres ne seront pas si grandes que ta courtoisie n'y puisse bien suppleer. A tant, Il recommande son œuvre à ta bonne reception, & moy je demeure, Ton tresaffectionné Patriotte.

DICTIONARY

OF THE

French and English Tongues.

Newly Refined and Amplified.

THE first letter of all Alphabets, is (as it is a Letter) a Substantive: whence, Il est Marqué à l'A: he is a right honest man: or, one in whom there is as much vertue, as great worth, as can be in any man; (From the money of France; every sort whereof hath stamped on it a particular letter, denoting the place wherein it was made; now that which is coined in Paris hath on it an A, and is, commonly of the best metal.)

A. The third person singular of the Verb Avoir, signifies (of it self) Hath, holdeth, possesseth, enjoyeth; as, Allez a qui bon credit a; also (when it hath the local Adverb y before it) Is; as, Allez y a si trop n'y a; But when it precedes a Participle in the preterperfect Tense of another Verb, it is restrained unto the first signification, Hath; as, il a gagné ce qu'il a peu; In all which (and otherwise only as it is a Letter) it is written without Accent.

A. An Article, set before a proper Name, or Noun, signifies, in matters of possession, of; as, La maison a Pierre, La femme a Robert; But where the Verb Estre goes before, it signifies, To, or, unto, as, La maison est a Pierre, belongs to Peter; So doth it also when it follows Verbs that require a Dative case; as, Je l'ay donné a toy; cela appartient a moy; or, that signifie motion to a place; as, Je m'en iray a Londres, a ma meraitie.

A. An Article or Preposition; signifieth sometimes, As, or For; Il est tenu a perdu; a for; a fable; sometimes only, For; a cette cause; sometimes, At; as, Tu me trouveras a Paris; a loisir; a votre commandement: Also, In, or At; as, a temps, & lieu; sometimes, In, or Before; as, a la presence du Roy; sometimes, By; as, a l'adventure; a cœur; a droit; a tort; & (as in old Authors) a dieu le veu, instead of, par dieu je le veux: sometimes, On, or upon; as, a lundi; il monte a cheval; sometimes, To; as, a propos; a point: also, Agreeable, or, according to; as, a l'ordinance des Arbitres: Also, Like unto; After the manner, or fashion of; as, vestu a l'Italienne; une espée a l'Espagnole: sometimes, with; as, a peu de perte; a banniere deployée; une chaire a accoudoirs; & (in Blazons) Il porte de Synople a trois Lyons d'argent: Also, With, or, Among; as, a nous tell fait est bien vilain; Il est a nous grande vinée. A la mienne volente, If I might have my will: or, I would to God.

Dont il est a grande joye, whereof he is very glad; which makes him very merry. Ils se faisoient tenir a douze; They made themselves be held by twelve; or, were so fierce that twelve were fain to hold them.

A. Preceding the Infinitive mood of a Verb, signifies, To, serving to, for to, of purpose for; as, S'il a chose a dire; un clou a prendre des sacs; sometimes it either gives the Verb a principal sence, as, Il est a dormir, he is sleeping, or new, or near asleep; or, the Verb being present, it denotes the future; as, J'ay cela a faire, I am to do that hereafter.

A. Before an Aiective, sometimes makes it admit of an Adverbial interpretation; as, a droit; a tort; rightfully, wrongfully.

A. Is sometimes not expressed, but understood; as, Si Dieu plaist, for, s'il plaist a Dieu.

Comite: m. A Count, an Earl. As soon as the ancient Franks had won Gallia from the Romans, their Kings appointed some of their principal followers, (by the names of Comites) to be the Governours and Judges of Provinces; and others (by the same title) of good Towns; giving them withal the territories thereof, to be held of them as Fiefs; and so they became both Officers, and Vassals; yet were they neither but at the will of their Sovereign, or, at most, not longer than during their own lives; But within a while they found means to make their Fiefs hereditary; and afterwards procured their governments to be annexed unto their Fiefs; and at length (taking advantage of the misfortune, weakness, or facility of their Princes) inroached on the Sovereignty of them both: (In all which time the Earls of Provinces were no whit inferior unto Dukes, having as large dominions as they, and Earls of Towns under them as well as they; besides that, the Governours of divers Provinces, (as Normandy Britain, and others) were as often called Earls, as Dukes.) Being at this height, and thereupon growing emulators, and sometimes the enemies of Kings, they on the other side took a course, at first by the Parliament, (settled at Paris) to abridge part of the royalties; and afterwards by Escheats, Consecrations, or marriages, to re-unite unto the Crown the whole estates of as many of them, (whether Earls, or Dukes) as yet acknowledged any dependency on them by Homage, or otherwise; (The rest, either at first (as Lorrain, and Savoy) having usurped an absolute Sovereignty; or since by mischances (as Burgundy, and Flanders, by the imprisonment of Francis the first) being alienated from the Crown;) And creating other Earls, have granted them only a jurisdiction, or sovereignty (if so they will have it) that's wholly contrrollable by the Parliaments, and subject unto themselves.
